The German football authorities will redesign the number "4" on national team jerseys because of allegations that it resembles the logo used by paramilitary Nazi units.

The German Football Association (DFB) made the announcement on Tuesday after users of social media began using an online service to create jerseys with the number "44" - 4 pointing to the resemblance to the Schutzstaffel, or SS. In a post on X, the DFB said it had previously presented the numbers 1 to 26 to the UEFA regulatory body and "none of the parties involved saw any proximity to Nazism in the creation process". The association said it was taking the matter "very seriously" (and was developing an alternative) by the digit.

While 44 is not currently used by men's or women's teams in Germany, the official jersey supplier Adidas allowed customers to personalize their jerseys with a number from 00 to 99 and a name up to 10 letters. The images generated by the online store were widely shared online.

Oliver Bruggen, Adidas spokesperson, told the German media that the sports giant would "block the number 44 as soon as possible", adding: "As a company, we are actively xenophobic."

From Wednesday, the option to personalize the German team jerseys had been removed from the Adidas website. Although Adidas remains in the local uniform market, Adidas did not respond immediately to the request for a return of the service without the number 4.

The DFB revealed the new uniforms for Germany, which will be used by men's and women's teams in March. The men's team wore the jersey during a match against France; they will be used in the 2024 UEFA European Championship (UEFA), presented by Adidas this summer.

Less than two weeks ago, the DFB announced that Nike would take over Adidas as the official jersey supplier for the German national team in 2027. The company has produced jerseys since 1950 and during which men's teams (Germany and Austria) won four World Cup titles (1950).

The Adidas decision to block personalization of jerseys comes after many on social media pointed to the resemblance of the numbers to the controversial SS insignia.

The SS was founded by Adolf Hitler and described as "political soldiers" of the Nazi Party. It assumed various police, security or military roles, including supervision of the Gestapo. When the Nazis came to power, it had grown from a small unit with fewer than 300 members to an organization of over 50,000. Later, it became associated with the worst crimes committed by the Nazis during World War II - including concentration camps in the country (such as Auschwitz).

The logo of the group was designed by the German graphic designer Walter Heck, who later joined the SS, having previously been a commander of the Nazi paramilitary Sturmabteilung (SA).

Like many Nazi symbols, the Heck logo was not based on runes.

antigas (como muitas vezes mitologizado por 4 Hitler), mas sim numa pseudo-runa criada pelo austríaco Guido von List no início do século XX. O logo era tão 4 amplamente utilizado na época que algumas máquinas alemãs foram produzidas com uma chave "SS" estilizada ”.
